Quarterly Commentary as at March 31, 2018

An overweight allocation to the Value factor was the largest contributor to returns for the quarter, supported by an overweight allocation to the Growth factor. Small size relative to the market hurt returns as smaller-cap stocks underperformed for the quarter. Additionally, an overweight allocation to the Momentum factor detracted from performance. The Financial Strength, Quality, and Yield factors aided returns for the quarter.

Overall allocation effects and overall security-selection effects contributed to returns for the quarter. With security selection, holdings in Materials, Health Care, Real Estate and Energy aided returns while Information Technology detracted. An underweight allocation to Energy and an overweight allocation to Consumer Discretionary contributed to performance while an overweight allocation to Health Care hurt performance.

Our research of individual stock data leads us to believe that Value, Momentum, and Quality are critically important to future outperformance. We consistently avoid sectors and industries that exhibit unfavourable characteristics and hone in on areas of the market that are favourable in the ways we deem relevant. Given the portfolio's positioning relative to its benchmark –measured by key characteristics we use in our stock selection process – we believe the portfolio is well situated for the rest of 2018.
