Quarterly Commentary as at June 30, 2017

The S&P/TSX Composite Total Return Index pared gains after hitting an all-time high in February. Underperformance stemmed from weakness in the Materials, Financials and Energy sectors, representing approximately two-thirds of Canada's benchmark stock index.

The economic uptick has continued to bloom and a synchronized global economic expansion is at hand. That said, the initial acceleration phase has arguably come to an end. As a result, risk assets are rising with less vigor than at the turn of the year. In the U.S., strong performances from the Health Care, Industrials and Financials sectors powered the advance, while returns in the Energy and Telecommunication Services sectors were a drag.

Asset allocation was a drag on Fund performance during the quarter, however security selection more than overcame the deficit. In Financials, Brookfield Asset Management was a strong contributor after reporting Q2 results that exceeded expectations.

While the broad based commodity shock has subsided, oil prices continue to be under pressure, declining approximately 20% year-to-date. Oil prices remain difficult to forecast, but remain below our estimate of marginal cost. Despite OPEC's moves to cut production, global inventory levels remain above long-term averages. However, we continue to believe that large companies with long-life reserves and strong balance sheets should deliver attractive levels of free cash as crude prices recover to the marginal cost of production.

Despite a slower Q2, the Canadian economy has had a strong start to 2017. Global economic growth is expected to trend modestly higher this year and our forecast has increased to 2.0% for Canada. In the U.S., stock market valuations are at above-average levels, however corporate fundamentals are supporting the market.
