Quarterly Commentary as at March 31, 2017

The S&P/TSX Composite Index hit an all-time high in the most recent quarter, after it was among the best-performing global equity markets in 2016. Notwithstanding this strength, it lagged the S&P 500 Index in the latest three months.

Since the election, the S&P 500 is up almost 12% and while some of the market's advance is attributed to pro-growth policy action, the fundamentals are also driving the market higher. The start of 2017 has seen strength in growth over value and a general reversal in sector performance, with Tech and Discretionary leading.

Energy dragged down U.S. and Canadian market performance due to weak oil prices. Concern about OPEC compliance and rising rig counts contributed to the weakness. Seasonally weaker demand also did not help to ease investor uneasiness in a volatile sector. A slight overweight detracted from performance; however, we continue to believe in companies with strong, sustainable balance sheets and healthy levels of free cash flow.

Meanwhile, security selection in Financials contributed to returns. In Canada, Brookfield Asset Management had above-consensus earnings results and raised their quarterly dividend, and in the U.S., KKR and PrivateBancorp boosted returns. While Canadian banks experienced some weakness as allegations over unfair sales practices surfaced, they still generated positive returns over the quarter.

Consumer discretionary was also a source of strength in the U.S., however it detracted from returns in Canada. Our zero weight in Canadian Tire detracted from returns, as earnings from same-store sales brought up the stock price. We continue to look for value in the sector that currently has some high valuations, stemming from a cyclical rally to end 2016.
