Quarterly Commentary as at June 30, 2018

After a burst of activity in the middle of 2017 that prompted the Bank of Canada to begin tightening, growth has decelerated. Despite slowing in the most recent quarter, GDP still rose 2.5% year over year and recent gains in monthly GDP suggest growth should pick up in the third quarter.

Industrial product price inflation stabilized with prices edging higher in May on the back of price strength in energy, lumber and metal products. Meanwhile Canada's labour market remains healthy and the unemployment rate is likely to remain stable.

The top-performing sectors by contribution to returns were Energy, Industrials and Materials. The bottom-performing sectors were Utilities, Telecommunication Services and Consumer Staples.

Entering the second half of 2018, the fundamental backdrop for growth assets remains favourable with both economic and corporate earnings growth still gaining on what was an accelerating year in 2017. That said, volatility has increased as populist politics and increased trade barriers have proved disruptive for markets, following a series of tariffs imposed on America's trading partners and counter-tariffs imposed against the U.S. It is expected that trade policy uncertainty will remain for the balance of 2018.

Another potential headwind investors will confront toward the end of 2018 is the upcoming inflection point in global liquidity that will be reached with an expected peaking in G-4 central-bank balance sheets. Even as the central bank of the world's largest economy, the U.S. Federal Reserve, has been shrinking its balance sheet, monetary policy has continued to be stimulative globally. Moving forward, a global transition to balance-sheet contraction at the end of the year is likely to test the global economy, which has become accustomed to continued central-bank stimulus.
