Quarterly Commentary as at March 31, 2018

Growth, which accelerated sharply in early 2017, now seems to be fading. As a result, GDP growth fell in January due to weakness in the Energy sector and softening real-estate activity spurred by new mortgage qualification rules. This marked the first decline in GDP since last August, lowering the year-over-year pace of GDP growth.

Meanwhile, industrial product price inflation stabilized with prices edging higher in February, despite price weakness in energy and meat & dairy products. All other components rose, with the largest contribution from a gain in motor and recreational vehicles. Meanwhile, Canada's labour market remains healthy and the unemployment rate will likely remain stable.

The top-performing sectors were Information Technology, Real Estate and Health Care, which all contributed to returns. The bottom-performing sectors were Energy and Financials.

Entering the second quarter of 2018, investors face a more uncertain investment landscape compared to the close of 2017. Since then, a bevy of new concerns have come to light which, in our view, will need to be overcome if equity markets are to advance in 2018. Despite first-quarter losses for global equities, the positive economic growth and earnings trends that provided foundation for 15 consecutive monthly gains in global equities through January appear intact. Expectations for 2018 corporate-earnings growth accelerated in the first quarter with both U.S. and overall developed-market earnings expected to advance beyond previous December estimates. We expect that U.S. growth and inflation will continue to advance at a pace consistent with at least three U.S. Federal Reserve rate increases in 2018.
