Quarterly Commentary as at March 31, 2018

In the first quarter, global financial markets felt the effect of a rise in protectionist policies and the impact of a potential trade war between the U.S. and China. European equities fell during the period as volatility returned to markets after a strong performance in 2017. There were also signs of a slowdown in European economic growth and the positive growth uptick predicted for 2018 has not materialized thus far, resulting in a reversal of momentum in cyclical stocks. The macroeconomic environment – a stable Chinese economy and a gradual increase in commodity prices – remained supportive of Asian equities. Japanese markets, however, recorded substantial losses in local-currency terms as the yen rallied on speculation that the Bank of Japan may pull back from its stimulus program sooner than expected. Concern about continuing trade-tariff rhetoric between the U.S. and China was a concern during the period.

The best-performing index sectors were Consumer Discretionary, Information Technology, Industrials and Health Care. The worst-performing sectors were Materials, Telecommunication Services and Consumer Staples.

It is the Fund's policy to maintain currency hedges at all times to neutralize exchange-rate movements between overseas currencies and the Canadian dollar. This policy was negative for performance in the first quarter of 2018 as unitholders did not benefit from the overall rise in currencies against the Canadian dollar.
