Quarterly Commentary as at June 30, 2017

The Canadian economy continued to strengthen in Q2, all but eliminating the need for the Bank of Canada (BoC) to reduce short-term interest rates. Yields trended lower in April and May, and bonds recovered most of the losses recorded following Trump's election in late 2016, as it appeared that the administration would struggle to get policies enacted. However, Canadian bond yields spiked up in June after the BoC stated that the strength in the economy would warrant higher rates. Particularly hard hit were bonds maturing in less than 5 years as they are more closely aligned with monetary policy.

Going forward, the portfolio manager expects bond yields to rise slowly in the coming quarters as the global economic expansion and fading threat of disinflation have led major central banks to consider tighter monetary policies. In the second half of 2017 the BoC is expected to remove the emergency cuts that weak oil markets justified in 2015. In addition to hiking rates, the portfolio manager expects the U.S. Federal Reserve to begin gradually reducing the amount of bonds on its balance sheet; an approach that the portfolio manager does not believe will disrupt fixed-income markets. Long-maturity yields are likely to remain range-bound in the near term and move higher as growth improves and inflation firms.
