Quarterly Commentary as at September 30, 2017

The global acceleration in economic growth that began last year has been largely sustained. The need for extreme monetary stimulus is fading and central banks including the U.S. Federal Reserve and the Bank of Canada are gradually shifting toward tighter policy.

Global equities posted gains, led by emerging-market and Canadian equities, as prices for oil and other commodities strengthened. The S&P 500 finished the period at a record high, but a weaker U.S. dollar offset most of the returns when translated back into Canadian dollars. The Fund benefited from exposure to the RBC

O'Shaughnessy U.S. Value Fund, the RBC Canadian Equity Fund, the CI Synergy Canadian Corporate Class and the Invesco European Growth Class.

The fuel behind equity gains this year has been a synchronized increase in corporate profits around the world. However, the valuation tailwind from falling interest rates may be exhausted. The bull market can be sustained without rising valuations as long as companies continue to increase profits, but it also means the market could be vulnerable if earnings fail to come through.
