Quarterly Commentary as at March 31, 2018

The Energy sector delivered robust returns in Q1. The oil price traded in a range in the US$60 /barrel mark and looks to be strengthening into a multi-year high on geopolitical unrest in the Middle East coupled with trade-war rhetoric that resulted in a lower U.S. dollar. Natural gas prices trended below USD 2.85 per million British thermal units and continues to trend lower.

The Materials sector delivered weaker results in Q1. Trade-war concerns, which could potentially slow global growth, and increased steel and copper inventories contributed to this move. Electric vehicle-themed commodity lithium strengthened in the quarter 18%; however, lithium equities sold off.

The Fund's relative performance was positively impacted by underweighting integrated producer, Exxon Mobil Corp. and pipeline company, Enbridge Inc. while overweighting ConocoPhillips Co. Offsetting some of this positive performance was our underweight in energy services company, Schlumberger Ltd., and integrated Statoil ASA.

Overweights in iron-ore producer, Rio Tinto, and chemicals producer, Eastman Chemical Co., contributed positively to Materials performance. Offsetting this performance on the negative side was the Fund's overweight in Electric vehicle-themed companies producing lithium and graphite. Although lithium prices were up in the quarter, overweights in Albermarle Corp. and Neo Lithium Corp. underperformed.

The portfolio manager believes that OPEC will continue to take steps to manage supply so that global inventories gradually return to normalized levels in the second half of 2018, even with incremental growth from U.S. onshore basins. Assuming global inventories continue to decline, the portfolio manager sees the potential for gains in oil prices and energy-equity prices during 2018. The portfolio manager's approach remains to invest in companies with high-quality assets, strong management and the ability to finance growth projects.
