Quarterly Commentary as at March 31, 2017

The Energy sector delivered weak Q1 performance following a stronger Q4 where OPEC agreed to cut production by a total of about 2%. U.S. natural gas prices fell sharply from their year-end highs as gas production from oil wells created supply/demand imbalances. After plunging in Q4, gold prices rebounded in Q1. The U.S. Federal Reserve hiked interest rates in March, but its unexpected dovish commentary provided additional support. Base metals were stronger in the quarter on tight supply for copper and zinc.

The Fund's Energy sector underperformed the benchmark by 0.9% for the quarter mainly from asset allocation. The Fund overweighted exploration and production such as Seven Generations and Crew Energy, which detracted from performance while, underweights in integrated names such as Chevron and Exxon Mobil helped offset some of the negative performance.

The Fund's Material sector outperformed the benchmark by 1.3% for the quarter mainly from asset allocation.

The Fund's relative performance was positively impacted by overweights in base metal developers Ivanhoe Mines and Arizona Mining, overweights in gold producers Torex Gold and Marathon Gold and overweights in Wood product names such as Interfor and Louisiana Pacific.

In late May, OPEC will meet again to discuss extending their previous agreement to maintain production at 32.5 million barrels for another six-month term. The market will be focused on seeing actual U.S. inventory improvements now that refinery maintenance season has ended.

Precious metal equities are poised to take advantage of any hints of economic weakness, investor skepticism in Trump's agenda, or unexpected geopolitical tensions. With healthier balance sheets and improved cost structures, commodity price strength could lead to material cash flow generation.
