Quarterly Commentary as at March 31, 2018

An underweight allocation to the Size factor (i.e., positioning in stocks smaller in market cap than the benchmark) was the largest contributor to returns this quarter, supported by an overweight allocation to the Growth factor. Overweight allocations to the Yield and Value factors detracted from returns in Q1.

Overall allocation effects and overall security selection contributed to performance in Q1. Within security selection, holdings in Financials and Consumer Staples aided returns while Materials detracted. Overweight allocations to Consumer Staples and Utilities as well as an underweight allocation to Financials contributed to performance for the quarter while an overweight allocation to Telecommunications Services hurt performance.

From a country perspective, overall allocation effects contributed to performance while overall security-selection effects detracted from performance. Within security selection, holdings in the United Kingdom, Italy and Switzerland aided returns while those in Japan, France, Germany and Austria detracted. Overweight allocations to Italy and Norway and an underweight allocation to the United Kingdom contributed to performance while an overweight allocation to Australia and an underweight allocation to the Netherlands detracted from returns for the quarter.

Compared to the strategy benchmark, our focus on Value, Yield, Momentum and Quality has allowed us to construct a portfolio trading at 19-47% discounts on price-earnings and price-sales ratios. Our research of individual stock data leads us to believe that value, yield, momentum and quality are critically important to future outperformance. We consistently avoid sectors and industries that exhibit unfavourable characteristics and overweight areas of the market that are favourable in the ways we deem important.
