Quarterly Commentary as at March 31, 2018

A large overweight allocation to the Value factor was the largest contributor to performance this quarter while overweight allocations to Momentum and Growth factors also supported performance. Underweight allocations to the Size and Financial Strength factors hurt returns for the quarter.

Overall sector-allocation effects and overall security-selection effects contributed to returns during the quarter. Within security selection, holdings in Materials, Real Estate and Industrials aided returns while Financials detracted from returns. An underweight allocation to Energy and overweight allocations to Consumer Discretionary and Real Estate contributed to performance while an underweight allocation to Information Technology hurt performance.

Our research of individual stock data leads us to believe that Value, Momentum, and Quality are critically important to future outperformance. We consistently avoid sectors and industries that exhibit unfavourable characteristics and hone in on areas of the market that are favourable in the ways we deem relevant. Given the portfolio's positioning relative to its benchmark –measured by key characteristics we use in our stock selection process – we believe the portfolio is well situated for the rest of 2018.
