Quarterly Commentary as at September 30, 2018

Trade and the accelerating U.S. economy were the big stories in the third quarter of 2018. The U.S. raised pressure on China to open up its economy, but by quarter end there was scant evidence that the conflict had done much to hinder the U.S. economic expansion. U.S. stocks posted solid gains during the period, with the benchmark index rising to an all-time high, supported by a solid economic backdrop and robust earnings growth. The continued economic expansion led the U.S. Federal Reserve to raise interest rates during the period.

The Fund underperformed its benchmark, the Russell 3000 Index, during the quarter. The Large Cap Value and Growth strategies had a positive impact on performance. However, the Mid Cap Value and Small Cap Value sleeves detracted from returns.

Economic growth is strong in the U.S., but many other economies are slowing. Protectionism and Chinese economic deceleration are among the risks threatening the solid, albeit moderating, global growth. While we expect continued expansion, the slowdown has led us to lower our developed-world growth forecasts.

Our analysis of a variety of scenarios suggests that stocks in the U.S. can deliver decent upside with reasonable assumptions, as long as earnings continue to come through as analysts expect. We recognize, however, that given the late stage in the business cycle and the fact that valuations are above equilibrium, earnings growth is now critical to sustaining the bull market in stocks.
