Quarterly Commentary as at March 31, 2018

The U.S. stock market had slightly below-average progress in the first quarter of 2018. Strong performances from the Technology and Consumer Discretionary sectors powered the advance while the interest-rate sensitive Utilities, Real Estate, Telecommunications and Consumer Staples sectors, along with the economically sensitive Materials and Energy sectors, were detractors.

The S&P 500 (CAD) has increased over 10% in the past year, driven by a synchronized global economic expansion, accommodative global monetary policy and U.S. tax reform. The S&P 500 is on track to generate over 15% earnings growth in 2018 thanks to reasonably strong global growth, a weaker U.S. dollar, rising oil prices and a lower corporate income tax rate.

During the quarter, security selection in the Industrials, Financials and Utilities sectors aided returns. In Industrials, a large position in the Boeing Company generated strong returns following exceptional financial results. Overweight positions in JP Morgan Chase & Co. and Bank of America Corp. boosted returns in the Financial sector as the market rewarded banks for strong earnings growth and the prospect of large capital returns. In Utilities, an overweight position in NextEra Energy Inc. lifted performance as the company continues to lead the rollout of renewable energy solutions.

Conversely, our underweight allocation to the Consumer Discretionary and Technology sectors hurt performance. Many companies in these sectors do not pay dividends, so during periods when they outperform it is difficult for our holdings in these sectors to keep pace. For example, performance was hurt by more than 1% because we do not own non-payers such as Amazon.com Inc., Netflix, Adobe Systems Inc., Nvidia Corp., Priceline.com and Micron Technology Inc. An overweight position in cable company, Comcast Corp. also hurt performance as it changed its capital-allocation strategy from buybacks and dividends to acquisitions.

Stocks continue to be supported by strong corporate-profit growth, but rising interest rates and ongoing trade conflicts have introduced increased risk and volatility into markets. Given strong performance over the past nine years, investors should temper their expectations going forward.
