Commentary as at June 30, 2019

The Fund's performance bounced back from the declines of late last year with a strong start to 2019. Global stocks benefited from the U.S. Federal Reserve declaring a halt to further interest-rate increases and signaling that it is open to interest cuts if needed. The U.S. central bank was taking the lead in support of global bond markets, which had strong returns as interest rates plummeted. The plunge in interest rates buoyed stocks, with North American equities leading. Equity returns were more modest in Europe and Asia, which were more exposed to outstanding trade issues.

The Fund's international holdings in the developed markets of Europe and Asia outperformed, but returns in these international markets were limited after taking into account the strength of the Canadian dollar against most of its peers.

The Fund continued to carry a modest overweight position in stocks and an underweight position in bonds. A modest amount of money was taken out of both asset classes after the financial-market strength of the first half of the year, and the Fund now has slightly overweight cash position as a result. In contrast to the prior decade, the yields available on stocks, bonds and cash are now fairly uniform, and as a result there is no significant penalty to owning cash.

The Fund has continued to take steps to reduce its exposure to potential drops in financial markets. The asset mix reflects a somewhat optimistic view that the economy and corporate profits will continue growing at a moderate pace, balanced against the fact the business cycle is in its later stages and that the risk of recession has inched higher. Yields could rise somewhat in the short term after such a rapid decline, but the portfolio manager does not expect them to increase significantly over the intermediate term.
