Commentary as at June 30, 2019

U.S. equities recovered in the first half of 2019 following significant global stock declines in late 2018. Stocks advanced for much of the period on expectations that the U.S. Federal Reserve would stimulate economic growth by lowering short-term interest rates on signs that the expansion was starting to lose momentum. Protectionist measures by the U.S. and China were another source of concern for investors, as a breakdown in trade talks between the countries stoked worries that global trade would be inhibited.

The Fund's returns were held back by a combination of stock selection and sector allocation. The Fund's underweight allocation to the Information Technology sector was a negative for relative returns, as was overall stocks selection in the Health Care and Financials sectors. Individual stocks that hurt relative performance including Abiomed, Nordstrom and A.O. Smith.

Returns were bolstered by underweight exposure to the Communication Services sector and overall stock selection in the Consumer Discretionary sector. Individual stocks that had a positive impact on relative performance included MercadoLibre, Synopsys and WEX Inc.

A lack of progress on resolving the U.S.-China trade conflict continues to be the primary near-term threat to U.S. economic growth, and the sub-advisor has therefore been making more investments that tend to be less sensitive to the pace of economic growth. The sub-advisor believes any significant progress on the trade front has the potential to significantly boost equity markets further, especially in the more economically sensitive sectors that would be supported by expectations of continued economic growth.
