

RBC Emerging Markets Bond Fund (CAD Hedged)

Investment Objective

To provide total returns comprised of interest income and capital growth while minimizing the exposure to currency fluctuations between foreign currencies and the Canadian dollar. The fund invests primarily in government debt securities of emerging market countries and may also invest in emerging market corporate bonds and government debt securities of developed countries. The fund may do so either directly or indirectly through investment in other mutual funds managed by RBC GAM or an affiliate. The fund will also use derivatives to hedge against the fluctuations in the value of foreign currencies relative to the Canadian dollar.

Commentary as at June 30, 2019

Emerging-market bonds rose in the first half of 2019, as yields plunged, amid indications that major central banks including the U.S. Federal Reserve (the "Fed") would lower short-term interest rates and that economic growth in China, the largest emerging market, was firming after a slowdown last year. The recovery in emerging-market fixed income reversed headwinds that had weighed on markets in 2018, when faster global economic growth and related expectations of faster inflation pushed interest rates higher and bond prices lower. Yields on emerging-market bonds fell more than they did on developed-market securities in the first half of the year, reflecting a renewed appetite for emerging-market and other riskier assets.

The resumption of an environment of falling yields renewed investors' appetites for assets that offer higher yields. Emerging-market sovereign issuers, both investment grade and high yield, took advantage of this for emerging-market fixed-income assets in order to front-load the majority of their external financing needs of the year.

Significant exposure to high-yield emerging-market countries contributed to performance, although a preference for better-quality countries within this area held back returns. In the first half of this year, the portfolio manager increased exposure to Brazil given indications that the new government will work to tackle some of the economy's structural problems.

The Fed's bias for lower interest rates and revived hopes that China and the U.S. can arrive at a trade agreement are supporting emerging-market bonds for now. However, the outlook for emerging-market economic growth hasn't improved enough, in the view of the portfolio manager, to make emerging-market bonds particularly attractive at current valuations, which are near their long-term average. The portfolio manager also recognizes that the conditions that led the strong performance of emerging-market bonds in the first half of 2019 will be hard to replicate in the second half of the year.
