Commentary as at June 30, 2019

European equities performed well during the first six months of 2019, rebounding from declines at the end of last year, on prospects for falling interest rates and a degree of optimism that the U.S. and China would settle their trade dispute before too much damage could be done to global commerce. Gains recorded in the first half restored stocks close to levels where they were in mid-2018.

The failure of U.K. politicians to agree to terms by which the U.K. would leave the European Union (the "EU") continued to hamper the U.K.'s economic growth. The portfolio manager notes that the Fund's investments tend to be in global businesses whose fortunes do not depend unduly on the swings of regional politics.

Against this political backdrop, unemployment rates in Europe still managed to reach their lowest levels since 2008. While European economic conditions stabilized to some degree, subdued growth remained a concern for many investors.

The stock markets of Switzerland, the Netherlands and France were Europe's strongest-performing equity markets. Finland was Europe's worst-performing stock market, with Austria and Spain also performing poorly. The Fund's underweight position in the Communication Services sector held back portfolio returns the most, while an equal-weight position in Financials was the largest contributor to relative returns.

Among individual stocks, London Stock Exchange Group, the financials company, was the biggest contributor to the Fund's performance. Imperial Brands, the tobacco company, held back returns the most.

Geopolitical uncertainty and economic indicators continue to suggest that economic growth could moderate, meaning market volatility is likely to continue for the remainder of 2019. Other factors that are likely to influence markets include the appointments of new leaders for the European Commission, the EU's governing body, and the European Central Bank, as well as the question of the final form of Brexit.
