Commentary as at June 30, 2019

U.S. high-yield bonds experienced a strong recovery during the first half of 2019 after declines in late 2018, with higher-rated higher-risk bonds outperforming the lowest-rated bonds. Credit spreads, which represent the premium required by investors to invest in lower-rated debt, fell sharply during the first quarter, pushing up high-yield bond prices. Spreads then widened in May amid concern about the U.S.-China trade dispute and slowing global economic growth, but ended the period on a positive note, resulting in strong overall first-half performance.

An important driver of returns was the U.S. Federal Reserve's (the "Fed") decision to signal the end of its rate-hiking cycle on concern about slowing economic growth, persistently weak inflation and a realization that higher interest rates were starting to damage the economy. Yields fell across the board, especially in the second quarter, with government-bond yields in the U.S. and Canada reflecting investor demand for a safe haven from the worsening macroeconomic backdrop.

The supply of newly issued high-yield bonds picked up but remained low by historical standards. The Fund's returns were aided by exposure to specific issuers in the areas of energy, retail, homebuilding and base-metals mining. The Fund's performance was hurt by elevated cash holdings amid rising macroeconomic risks and valuations.

The health of the corporate-bond market has improved slightly and defaults remain low. Meanwhile, the hunt by investors for income in the low-yield environment is providing support for high-yield bonds.

Valuations of high-yield bonds are not especially attractive at current levels. However, the portfolio manager recognizes that credit defaults remain low, and that central banks have taken steps to support economic growth and, by extension, corporate profits. The Fund is conservatively positioned given the portfolio manager's expectation of more moderate near-term returns.
