Commentary as at June 30, 2019

The global economic backdrop deteriorated during the first half of 2019, as weaker growth in Europe and emerging markets offset a solid expansion in North America. Geopolitics took on greater prominence during the period. In Europe, Italy faced demands to get a handle on its debt and budget deficit, and President Trump ramped up pressure on Iran, pursued an aggressive stance toward China and threatened Mexico with tariffs. The U.S. Federal Reserve acknowledged these cumulative threats to the outlook with a willingness to lower short-term interest rates in support of economic growth.

Canadian bonds recorded solid returns in the first half of 2019, joining a global rally led by fixed-income markets in the U.S. and Europe. Concerns about a slowdown in the global economic expansion and worsening trade tensions prompted major central banks to shift to a preference for lower interest rates after having indicated that rates would rise for most of last year. The yield on Canada's 10-year government yield dropped about ½ percentage point during the period, while the Bank of Canada left its benchmark interest rate at 1.75% and said the level of short-term interest rates will depend on whether domestic economic growth continues to rebound.

The drop in bond yields now reflects expectations for slower global economic growth, geopolitical concerns and the current state of the trade conflict between the U.S. and China. The risk of a near-term recession remains low, in the view of the portfolio manager, and any signs of economic stabilization and/or an easing in trade tensions could push yields sharply higher and lead to declines in bond prices. As a result, the portfolio manager expects higher-than-normal financial-market volatility in the second half of 2019 given that investors are divided on the outlook for economic growth and financial markets.
