Commentary as at June 30, 2019

U.S. and Canadian high-yield bonds climbed during the first half of 2019, recovering from declines toward the end of 2018. Credit spreads, which represent the premium required by investors to hold lower-rated debt, fell sharply during the first quarter. Spreads then widened in May amid concern about the U.S.-China trade dispute and slowing global economic growth, but ended the period on a positive note, resulting in strong overall performance in the first half and the outperformance of high-yield bonds versus investment grade.

An important driver of returns was the U.S. Federal Reserve's (the "Fed") decision to signal the end of its rate-hiking cycle on concern about slowing economic growth, persistently weak inflation and a realization that higher interest rates were starting to damage the economy. Yields fell across the board, especially in the second quarter, with government-bond yields in the U.S. and Canada reflecting investor demand for a safe haven from the worsening macroeconomic backdrop.

The supply of newly issued high-yield bonds picked up but remained low by historical standards. The Fund returns were aided by exposure to U.S. high-yield bonds in general, and by exposure to specific issuers in the areas of energy, homebuilding, base-metals mining and leisure. The Fund's performance was hurt by elevated cash holdings amid rising macroeconomic risks and valuations.

The health of the corporate-bond market has improved slightly and defaults remain low. Meanwhile, the hunt by investors for income in the low-yield environment is providing support for high-yield bonds.

Valuations of high-yield bonds are not especially attractive at current levels. However, the portfolio manager recognizes that credit defaults remain low, and that central banks have taken steps to support economic growth and, by extension, corporate profits. The Fund is conservatively positioned given the portfolio manager's expectation of more moderate near-term returns.
