Commentary as at June 30, 2019

The S&P 500 Index outperformed most other developed equity markets during the first half of 2019, and Canadian equities recorded strong returns during the period as measured by the S&P/TSX Composite Index. Commodity prices, including oil and gold, appreciated during the period, and the Canadian dollar strengthened versus the U.S. dollar.

An underweight allocation to larger-capitalization stocks hurt performance, while an overweight position in stocks exhibiting strong momentum aided returns. Exposure to stocks with cheap valuations held back performance.

Allocation among sectors and security selection hurt returns. An underweight allocation to the Financials sector and an overweight allocation to Information Technology aided performance. An overweight position in the Energy and Communication Services sectors hurt returns. Stock selection in the Information Technology and Materials sectors added to returns, while hurting performance in Industrials and Consumer Staples. Allocations to Evraz, Fortescue Metal and Rio Tinto were the largest individual contributors to returns. Sumitomo Dainippon Pharma, Imperial Brands and Koninklijke Ahold Delhaize held back returns the most among individual stocks.

Allocation to countries hurt performance. Overweight exposure to Italy, Australia and New Zealand was the largest contributors to return, while an underweight position in Switzerland was a negative. Underweight exposure to Israel was negative for returns, offset by the positive impact of security selection in that country. Security selection in Germany, Finland and Japan contributed to returns. Security selection in the U. K. and France held back performance.

The Fund increased allocations to the Real Estate and Consumer Discretionary sectors during the period and decreased allocations to the Health Care and Communication Services sectors.
