Commentary as at June 30, 2019

U.S. equity markets rallied in the first half of 2019, largely as a result of optimism that the U.S. Federal Reserve would lower short-term interest rates, perhaps as early as July, and growing optimism that a trade agreement between the U.S. and China would be reached. The S&P 500 Index had faced heightened volatility during May as trade negotiations between the U.S. and China appeared to fall apart, but the volatility subsided after U.S. President Trump and Chinese President Xi indicated that they would work toward a resolution.

The Fund's relative performance was aided by security selection in the Industrials and Consumer Staples sectors. An overweight position in Progressive Corp. contributed to returns after the insurer reported strong earnings due to solid results in its personal and commercial auto businesses.

Security selection in the Health Care sector held back returns. The Fund's overweight position in CVS Health had a negative impact on performance after the health-services provider and pharmacy chain reported higher-than-expected costs and issues related to its Omnicare unit.

Portfolio turnover can be high for the Fund, as the portfolio manager attempts to generate better returns through active security and sector selection.

Stocks are likely to rise modestly over the next year, in the view of the portfolio manager, but there are several scenarios that could lead to a different outcome. Stock gains may be more robust if the economic expansion lasts through 2021, which would likely depend on interest-rate cuts by the U.S. Federal Reserve, the resolution of the U.S.-China trade dispute and a re-accelerating Chinese economy. Alternatively, global growth would continue to slow if the trade rift widens, corporate earnings continue to fall and rising geopolitical risks cause investors to reduce valuations for equities and other risky assets.
