Commentary as at June 30, 2019

Real interest rates have declined substantially in 2019. Continuing the trend from late 2018, long-term Real Return Bond (RRB) yields have moved lower on the back of concerns surrounding global and Canadian economic momentum. The concerns over slower economic growth, fueled in part by increased uncertainty surrounding trade negotiations, have caused investors to seek safety in government bonds and long-term RRB yields to move lower. Headline inflation (CPI), to which the principal amounts of the bonds in the fund are linked, has picked up recently and finished May at 2.4% on a year-over-year basis. At this level, CPI continues to trend in-line with the Bank of Canada's (BoC) target range of between 1% and 3%. For investors in the fund, real purchasing power will be maintained over the long-term regardless of the magnitude of actual inflation, thanks to the linkage to consumer prices. This typically results in high levels of investment income.

Actively managing positions across different maturity bonds had a positive impact on the fund's performance relative to its benchmark. The fund's real yield ended June at 0.3%, which is low by historical standards. At low yield levels, investors are more susceptible to negative absolute returns should yields move higher.

In Canada, the economic outlook reflects moderating housing activity and considerable pressure on the domestic energy sector. Consensus forecasts for Canada's GDP growth now sit at 1.5% for 2019, down from 1.9% at the beginning of the year. At the same time, Canada's job market has been quite strong according to recent job creation data and inflation has been trending upwards since the start of the year. In light of these developments, the Bank of Canada (BoC) has remained patient, leaving its policy interest rate unchanged since its last increase in October 2018.
